. I was, I thought I was, you know, about two weeks from going over there, thinking about it, and suddenly, like I said, you know, a couple days later, he was gone. (END VIDEOTAPE) GUNDY: We continue to check on this, John. COOPER: Robyn, the fact that you were there at the end. BURNETT: Yes. GUNDY: It was a very scary moment for you. The deputy who took the body, who said he was prepared for this to happen, was you, Robyn. And, you know, you could have not been there. You're a target. They are looking for you. You're a witness. You do that for a living. You believe in justice. I believe in justice. You've always taught others to believe in justice. I'm sure the American people believe in justice. They are concerned about justice for this man. And -- BURNETT: If it's justice for the killer, we should be -- GUNDY: That's what they want. That's not justice for this family. We have -- if we are to be human beings, if we are to be people, we should be able to get up and cry, and we should be able to get angry. And we should be able to be upset, and we should be able to go to a funeral and sing a song for the loved ones of these people. And we should be able to mourn the loss of the loved ones of this young man. Because what happened in the last night of his life, you know, was shocking. And I am sure his mother would like to have a chance to go to the funeral. And for some reason, we're not giving it to her because she happens to be in Africa. But we're working our butts off trying to get her her visa. COOPER: We're working our butts off to see -- GUNDY: Yes. Yes. BURNETT: We appreciate your support. COOPER: All right. What's New In?

The present invention relates generally to a system and method for detecting the presence of fissures on a wall structure. More particularly, the present invention relates to a system and method for detecting the presence of fissures on a wall structure using digital image data. Over the last several years there has been a substantial increase in the number of building fires in the United States. Building fires are a significant problem because the structural damage can be extensive and, in many cases, the damage is not immediately obvious due to the fact that the building is not being occupied and the flames are not visible until they have reached a point where they can be seen by people working in the building. In many cases, individuals are unable to detect the presence of a fire until the fire has been visible for a sufficient amount of time for the fire to burn a hole in a wall. When this occurs, the fire has moved away from the wall and the damage is already extensive and significant. In addition to the fire damage, many of these fires involve partially smoked cigarettes, burning debris, or other flammable materials which are released into the environment during the fire. As a result of the damage caused by these fires, insurance premiums for many building owners have increased. In addition to increased insurance premiums, an increased number of building fires also results in a loss of time and money for those who are responsible for extinguishing the fires and repairing the damage that results from the fires. For example, when a building owner discovers the presence of a wall fire or a fire in a wall in a structure where the owner does not own property, the owner must remove the wall covering to locate the fire and then decide how to proceed. If the structure is a single-family home, the owner will often need to remove the drywall and wallboard in order to locate the fire. If it is a multi-family building, the owner may need to remove the ceiling tiles, the insulation, the electrical walls, the wallboard, and any other building materials to locate the fire. Once located, the fire must be extinguished, and the cost of repairing the damaged structure must be determined. If the wall is located in a single-family structure, the repair costs are often limited to the replacement of the wall covering, which is typically insignificant compared to the cost of the building. However, if the wall is located in a multi-family structure, the cost of repairing the wall can be significantly more than the cost of the wall itself. In view of the above, there is a
